CamO's Story

Many people are not aware of Childhood Interstitial Lung Disease, how it is diagnosed, or how it impacts kiddos on a daily basis. This is largely due to the rarity of the diagnosis and lack of an established patient registry.

Childhood Interstitial Lung Disease (chILD) is not just one disease, but a larger group of many different rare lung conditions – more than 200 total – impacting the tissue & space around the air sacs (interstitium) and sometimes throughout the lungs (diffuse). The symptoms can vary quite drastically from mild to serious & life altering, but all types make it difficult for oxygen to be used in the lungs. Symptoms are supported in various ways, such as oxygen therapy, feeding tubes, steroids, antibiotics, or in severe cases - lung transplant.

After learning of his rare chILD diagnosis (NEHI) at 2 months old, Cameron Olson & his family were hit with unexpected challenges - both financially & logistically. Throughout their frequent hospital stays and clinic visits, they saw the support discrepancy between patient populations. Some families received community support, grants, parking vouchers, and other increased resource access - all thanks to generous donors. Families impacted with more rare diagnoses, like chILD, lacked awareness, support, and advocacy. Cam's family started their own non-profit, The CamO Fund, to help bridge the gap in this inequity and provide support to patients with diagnoses similar to Cam and families like their own!
